Privacy Statement

Providing a secure online environment for LOGIC customers and website users commands high priority status. Customers have the right to expect privacy and security relating to information collected by financial institutions and we have devoted a great deal of resources to design systems and procedures to safeguard your personal information.

What types of personal information does the LOGIC website collect and how is it used?

This site collects IP addresses or domain names anytime a web page is requested from the LOGIC server. This information is used in the aggregate to analyze site traffic. The URL of a referring Web page also may be logged for the same purpose.

Information provided by site visitors is collected to assist LOGIC in the performance of services offered by LOGIC. If you send email to LOGIC, your email address will be displayed in the message that we receive. We use this information to reply to your inquiry and we may keep your email message for our records and future reference. It is the privacy policy of LOGIC not to share that information with other companies or organizations, unless we are required to do so by law, court order or regulatory requirements.

The information that LOGIC collects from website traffic is used to improve the content of our web pages and to notify Internet consumers of items of interest. Collected information is not shared with other organizations for commercial purposes.

Frequently, users may voluntarily provide nonpublic personal information to LOGIC. If you give your mailing address to LOGIC online, then you may receive periodic mailings from us with information relating to the business and services of LOGIC. Likewise, if you give your telephone number to LOGIC online, then you may receive telephone contact from us with information relating to the business and services of LOGIC.

As LOGIC e-commerce evolves we shall make the appropriate updates of security policy changes on our website for your review.
